Information on Copyrights

The copyright protects your original work from being used by another for any purpose without your consent. When using work that has been created by others, be sure to get their permission in writing so you don’t find yourself in a legal problem down the road.
Copyright © 2001, John Smith

The most basic step to protecting your work is to put the Copyright notice on your original work. If there were to be a claim that someone has used your material without your consent, you would need to prove that you have the copyright on the material. This is done by registering your copyrighted material.

How Do I File A Copyright?

1. Poor Man’s Copyright. Seal your original work in an envelope and mail it to yourself through standard, first class US Postal service. Do not open the letter when you receive it. This becomes the proof that you wrote those exact words on or before the date of the postmark. While this is a legal process, your best bet is to file a copyright with the US Library of Congress.

2. Library of Congress. You can access the Library of Congress and get information and forms for filing a formal copyright via the Internet at www.loc.gov/copyright or by writing to the Library of Congress and requesting an application for copyright at:

   Library of Congress
   Copyright Office
   101 Independence Avenue, S.E.
   Washington, D.C. 20559-6000

   Public Information Office: (202) 707-3000

   Information specialists are on duty to answer questions by phone from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Eastern time, Monday-Friday, except federal holidays. Recorded information is also available.
AUDI O PROGRAMS

The Success Principles: Your 30-Day Journey from Where You Are to Where You Want to Be, by Jack Canfield and Janet Switzer, is a 30-day course with 6 CDs and a 90-page workbook that is a great supplement to this book. It contains numerous worksheets and exercises to help you integrate the material presented here. You can also listen to the CDs in the car to reinforce your new learning.
